Expert lecture on Web Application Vulnerabilities

"Detecting what software is running on the client (browser) is much easier than detecting what is running on the server."

-Andrew Hoffman

Web application vulnerabilities involve a system flaw or weakness in a web-based application. They can be exploited to compromise the application's security. These vulnerabilities are not the same as other common types of vulnerabilities, such as network or asset. They arise because web applications need to interact with multiple users across multiple networks and that level of accessibility is easily taken advantage by hackers.

To make student aware about the Web Application Vulnerabilities and also to extend their knowledge that how they can protect web applications from attackers, an expert lecture on "Web Application Vulnerabilities" was organized on May 29, 2024 by the Department of Computer Science for MCA II semester students. The Experts were Ms. Ashita Puntambekar, Manager UI Engineering, Impetus Pvt. Ltd., Indore and Mr. Huned Mun, Associate Technical Architect, Impetus Pvt. Ltd., Indore. The experts enlightened the students on applicability skills. The students were excited to know about this unsought field and interacted with the resource person to satisfy their inquisitiveness.

The activity made students aware about web application vulnerabilities and enlightened them about the SQL Injection, XSS(cross side scripting) and common injection, server side request forgery and unvalidated redirects and forwards which are indeed in the current Industry Scenario. The expert talks eventually ended opening up new horizons for the students. The program ended with vote of thanks. The session was well executed by Ms. Gulisha Gupta and Ms. Poonam Tanwar.
